If your printer is an Epson TM-H100 or TM-H200 series model (with a memory card slot), you should be able to use Adjprog as a utility to adjust your printer's power settings. Adjprog also allows you to configure other settings for your printer. There are several useful options available, so it can be a good choice for anyone who regularly maintains their printer's settings. Here are the most commonly useful options in Adjprog: Automatic Power Off Time - When the printer is idle for too long, it automatically shuts off. Adjprog Error Code 21000068 Support Printer Pottysupport Reset Printer - Restarts the printer, fixes common problems and returns the printer to its original settings. Manual Power Off Time - Allows you to turn the power off manually. This option is useful if the printer keeps shutting off even when the lid is open. Manual Power Off Time (Auto) - The same option as the previous setting, but will prompt you to confirm when you change this setting. Manual Power On Time - Tells the printer to wake up for a specific amount of time before powering on. Setting for Heated Bed - Selects whether the printer should heat the bed when it is printing to a heated print bed. Heated Bed Maintenance - Controls when the heated bed light turns on and off. Memory Card Slot - Allows you to use a memory card to store your printer settings. This utility allows you to adjust the power settings for your printer. Once you've downloaded the software from the product page, you can find the latest version of the utility in the printer's 'Settings > ADJPROG' menu (if you're using a TM-H100/TM-H200 series printer). For more information about using this utility, see the documentation in the Adjprog Help File. There are many advantages to using Adjprog to adjust your printer's power settings.
