Ingmar Bergman Centennial

Swedish cinema legend Ingmar Bergman, had he been alive to see it, would have marked his one hundredth birthday this past July. Instead, having died on his beloved island of Fårö in 2007, at the age of 89, he probably spent his centennial like any other day—playing chess with death, walling about God's silence, falling in and out of love, and writing plays to pass the purgatory. But if he has access to his archive, as I expect he does, perhaps his first and favorite pastime in eternity is to rummage around within it, screening reels and scanning artifacts as if he were a child unleashed in the enchanted, bric-a-brac-stacked drawing rooms of Fanny & Alexander (1982), transfixed by the costumes, props, and sundry charged objects. We can all do the same, right here in real life, thanks to the arrival in Boston of the remarkable, exhaustive, resplendent retrospective of Bergman's films that's been trav-

Bread and Puppet Theatre

Join in on this last get together of Cambridge's Summer in the City series with a show from Bread and Puppet Theater. Hailing from far up in the Northeast Kingdom, Vermont, B&P brings critical and radical ideas to viewers through larger than life handmade puppets crafted from paper mache.

The show they will be performing is "The Grasshopper Rebellion Circus", and they are serious when they say it's going to be a circus! Along with a spectacle of puppets get prepared to see rehearsed song and dance numbers, massive banner wavers, and big beautiful backdrops with a whacky, passionate, activist-charged, whimsically zany performances you've ever seen. This multi-disciplinary show culminates into a heroic story dating back to 1386 AD when a group of peasants overthrew a state of the art army of over 4000 soldiers. Be inspired to resist and make change with the legendary Peter Schumann, founder of Bread and Puppet. If you would like to join the puppet parade, show up 45 minutes early dressed in white.

Jason Trefts is a true curator of the local underground and September is his chance to flex his already mighty booking muscles to bring together the eclectic lineup known only as Boston Fuzzstival. For any locals, Fuzzstival is an annual staple.

Bands that all fall under the very wide umbrella of fuzzy garage and basement based rock'n roll come together to melt our faces and re-affirm why we all call Boston home. This year's fest takes place across three days: 9/27 @ Lilypad and 9/28-29 @ ONCE. While the spectrum here is wide, there's something comforting about Fuzzfest in that you know what's on the docket is bound to contain some level of distorted, noisy scrawl. Still, this year has some lighter fare with Anna Fox Rochinsky of Quilt, Olden Yolk, and La Neve. Also up to bat is local hip hop hero Oompa and big band collective What Cheer? Brigade. Of course fest staples like the mighty Monsieurs (fresh off their stint opening for the Foes at Fenway),

NICE GUYS, and Bong Wish also make appearances alongside many, many more. Like some sort of distorted family reunion, this annual gathering of local heads, music makers, fans, and freaks plays out like a dream. Sure rents keep rising and it seems like every week there's another reason to wanna get outta dodge but for some reason we all keep sticking around.

This is your reminder why.

TECHNOLOGY FOR THE REVOLUTION

F-Droid is more than an app, it's an entire app store featuring primarily free (as in freedom, not free beer) apps. For Android users exclusively, F-Droid isn't just a marketplace to go side-by-side with Google Play Store, it's full-featured enough to completely replace it. Anything you can think of: maps, games, calculators, weird niche internet configuration testing utilities: all there. F-Droid doesn't need Google Play to work which makes it key if you want to ditch your reliance on Google (a good idea for a variety of reasons!) F-Droid allows you to update your apps and browse for new ones. Furthermore, F-Droid is curated to keep junky or suspicious apps off the market for better user protection and provides warnings when an app has questionable practices such as in-app purchases, excessive permissions, or other consumer-unfriendly items. There is a downside which is that it has a much smaller inventory than Google Play store and many of the apps you're used to may be missing (probably because they're malicious), but F-Droid is certainly filled out enough to be more than usable. If you're looking to ditch the Googs or you're looking for a list of the best open-source apps, we recommend F-droid for all your app store needs. You can get it at <https://f-droid.org>

NOTES FROM THE CREW

Last year, I made the move from NYC back to my hometown of Boston. I was going to lots of shows to form new connections in the area. In early June, I attended the Carla Del Forno show and met Sam Potrykus at the front door. That night, I also picked up a copy of the Compass to browse through. Growing up, I remember feeling especially at home at local shows in the Boston area. After reading through the issue of the Compass, I did some googling and found myself signing up to volunteer with Boston Hassle. In my third month of volunteering with the Hassle crew, I can happily say I'm feeling once again a part of a thriving community of creatives who make amazing things happen in the area. The amount of trust this group puts in me is inspiring -- they gave me my own email address in the first month because I'd agreed to take on some organizational projects (so official!) If you're the kind of person who seeks out independent music and arts and wants to see them thrive in Boston, you should definitely volunteer. We're looking for folks to help run our shows, drop new issues of the Compass around town or post up some flyers. We are hosting a volunteer fair so you can learn about these opportunities and more on September 29, 12-5pm at the Dorchester Art Project. Come say hi and learn more about how you can get involved!
